Pee Dee Field Day Shows Farmers How Research, New Technology Can Bring Greater Profits

Hundreds of farmers converged on the Pee Dee Research and Education Center last week to see the latest techniques in agriculture at the annual farm field day. Three tours highlighted research being done on cotton, soybeans, peanuts, sorghum, and bioenergy, with experts showing exactly how their results were achieved.

Examining dozens of test plots allowed growers to see first-hand how various crops can be managed most effectively. From insect and weed management in cotton to the use of sorghum as an alternate to dry-land corn, the demonstration plots showcased several row crops.

In the soybean field, for example, Clemson agent Ben Fallen invited farmers to observe soybeans that had been planted in two-week intervals, beginning April 28 and ending July 2.

He covered drought, genetic diversity, and several other topics, explaining that farmers can spread their risks by using different varieties and extending the planting season in both directions.

USDA specialist Phil Bauer explained the effects of lime on peanuts, while Clemson's peanut breeder, Shyam Tallury, exhibited several varieties. Developing a new variety can take 10 to 15 years, but pollinating peanuts in greenhouses and using sister research centers in Puerto Rico could cut that time in half, he said.

Fields of sorghum, which was one of the specialty crops featured at the Pee Dee Research Center, created quite a bit of interest from farmers. Several varieties are grown on site.

Another interesting tour focused on bioenergy and the research being done with switch grass and sorghum. Farmers were particularly interested in sorghum, which can be used as grain, meal, fodder, or fuel. Clemson's David Gunter explained that sorghum can be grown for about half the cost of corn. Yields are about 30 to 40 bushels per acre with little effort from the farmer, but he has pushed some of his plots up to 130 bushels. Other possible bioenergy sources are hybrid poplar, eucalyptus, and cottonwood, which are also being grown at the research center.

Farmers were encouraged to ask questions at every stop. Lunch speaker Gordon Mikell, SC Conservation Agronomist with USDA-NRCS, talked about advances in soil health and the use of cover crops. Research at the 2,300-acre farm focuses on crops grown in the Pee Dee which offer economic potential to the region.

Fall Brings Flower Festivals

Not only does fall bring cooler temperatures, but it also means that our increasingly popular plant and flower festivals are right around the corner. Each year our state farmers markets host fabulous festivals in Columbia, Florence, and Greenville.

When it comes to getting your yard ready for fall and winter, and even next spring, it's hard to beat all of the available choices of local shrubs, flowers, and trees. The vendors seem to save their best stock for these festivals, and are happy to assist you with information on each plant you select. In addition, the Clemson Extension's Master Gardeners will be present throughout the events to answer all of your landscape questions and offer good sound gardening advice.

If you live in the Upstate, join us at the Greenville State Farmers Market on Rutherford Road for AutumnFest at the Market, which will be held September 19 and 20. Hours are 8 a.m. until 6 p.m. both Friday and Saturday. I always find unique items at this festival, because, after all, South Carolina boasts of being "from the mountains to the sea," and each area has its own plants distinctive to that part of the state. What grows in Charleston won't necessarily thrive in Spartanburg, but if you choose your plants from the

Versatile New Crops

Switchgrass and sorghum were two of the biomass crops discussed by Clemson's Jim Frederick at the Pee Dee Research Center field day. While both are fast growers, sorghum is more versatile. It can be used as animal food and forage, while switchgrass offers good quail habitat.

Pelion's Ag Ed Program Wins State Award

The S.C. Association of Agricultural Educators named the Pelion High agricultural education program the 2013-2014 South Carolina Outstanding Middle/Secondary School Ag Ed Program.

Pelion High competed against 120 school agricultural programs across the state. The award was based on teaching philosophy, effective classroom and experiential instruction, development of community partnerships, FFA and Young Farmer participation, the school's Center for Advanced Agribusiness

Research, and the advanced agricultural curriculum offered.

The Center for Advanced Agribusiness Research opened at PHS in August 2011 and continues to provide opportunities for students interested in pursuing agribusiness careers. Partnerships with local farms and businesses help provide scholarships for program activities, student internships, field studies, guest speakers and research opportunities. The school also has an award winning FFA chapter with 150 members.

Deadlines for Young Farmer Contest Changed

South Carolina Farm Bureau has long been proud of its young volunteer leaders, recognizing them through state and national Achievement and Excellence in Agriculture Awards – two highly competitive contests for farmers and agriculturalists ages 18-35.

Historically, the awards have been presented at the December annual meeting in Myrtle Beach, only to have an immediate deadline to apply for the American Farm Bureau's national competition held the following January. That provided little time for state-level winners to submit their lengthy national applications.

The new deadline of Oct. 1 for the 2015-16 Achievement Award and Excellence in Agriculture Award is 10 months earlier than usual. Winners of the 2014 contests will be announced at the annual meeting in December. The 2015-16 contest winners will be announced at the Young Farmer & Rancher conference on Jan. 30-31 in Charleston.

The state Achievement Award winner receives their choice of a Chevy Silverado or a GMC Sierra pickup truck, plus cash and travel to national conferences. The state Excellence in Agriculture winner receives a Polaris ATV plus cash and travel to national conferences. Major contest sponsors include the SCFB Federation, Southern Farm Bureau Casualty Company, Southern Farm Bureau Life Company, Polaris, and STIHL, Inc.

Details can be found at scfb.org/programs/young-farmer-rancher-program/young-farmer-rancher-contests.

Increase your Knowledge of Goats at Workshop

Clemson University Cooperative Extension Service Livestock and Forages Team will conduct a one day Small Ruminant Management Workshop on Friday, Nov. 7 from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at the Pee Dee Research and Education Center in Florence.

The program will cover several important aspects of Small Ruminant Management. Topics will include facilities, common health problems, feeding and nutrition, forage basics, business and marketing, and some hands-on demonstrations.

Speakers include Dr. Niki Whitley, Animal

Science Specialist of NC A&T State University, Dr. Patty Scharko, Brian Beer, Lee Van Vlake and Amber R. Starnes, Clemson specialists.

The cost is $70, which includes written information and lunch. This program should prove beneficial to new and experienced goat owners alike. Space is limited, and the registration deadline is Nov. 3. Applications are available at local Clemson Extension offices or contact Amber Starnes, Chesterfield County Extension Office at 843-623-2134 ext 0 or astarn@clemson.edu.

Fall Brings Flower Festivals

selections offered in your area, you're well on the way to an even more beautiful yard.

The Midlands Plant & Flower Festival is Sept. 26-28 at the State Farmers Market in West Columbia. Hours are 8 a.m. until 6 p.m. on Friday and Saturday and 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. on Sunday.

Last year, just under 15,000 folks attended this family-friendly event, and we are expecting an even bigger crowd for 2014.

At the Midlands festival, regular vendors will be in the north shed. A big selection of pumpkins and other produce will be available, and food trucks will be in the food court. Don't forget to check out the booths inside the Market Pavilion for lots of homemade crafts, specialty foods, and unusual gift items. Dupre at the Market will be serving delicious down-home country cooking, and the new bakery will be open.

The oldest of the three festivals, the Pee Dee Fall Plant & Flower Festival, has been operational for 22 years. The dates are Oct. 3-5 at the Pee Dee State Farmers Market. Hours are 8 a.m. until 6 p.m. on Friday and Saturday and 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. on Sunday. It is also the most popular, with about 20,000 people coming throughout the weekend. Fabulous flowers, seasonal plants, lawn and garden décor, plus a huge array of agricultural and horticultural products, will be available. Master Gardeners will be there to provide answers to any of your gardening concerns. It may be a little cooler by then, so take advantage of the fall season and head for the festival.

These festivals are the best place to find everything you need to enhance your landscape and have fun doing it. Admission and parking are free for all three festivals. Dress comfortably, and bring along a wagon so you can easily transport your treasures, or rent one there. Bring the kids! In fact, let the kids pull the wagon, and everyone will be happy.

As each year passes, homeowners become more and more proud of their property. Now, it seems everyone wants an outdoor living space, or at the very least, a focal point for their yard. Garden furniture, fountains, fencing, living borders, lawn décor and outdoor art can all enhance your private yard areas, or make your public spaces the envy of the neighborhood.

Blanche and I built a patio area a couple of years ago with a fire pit. We retired the old syrup kettle that my friend Johnney Haralson sold me, which sat on top of an old tractor tire rim. This year, we are looking forward to attending the plant and flower shows to get ideas and see the many diverse and beautiful agricultural and horticultural products that South Carolina has to offer. I hope you will do the same!

Dirt Work Incubator Farm Awarded $50,000

Dirt Works Incubator Farm on Johns Island received $50,000 in a national contest to accelerate small business growth. Sponsored by the U.S. Small Business Administration, the contest had entries from 31 states.

Dirt Works Incubator Farm, started in 2012 as a first of its kind in South Carolina, provides three years of production and business support for participating farmers. Participants lease an acre of land for $2,000 a year and are provided access to a tractor, packing facility, walk-in cooler, tool storage, irrigation and assistance from a mentor farmer.

The initial 10-acre parcel located on Walnut Hill Plantation is divided into 1- to 2-acre plots for up to six farmers and one acre for a teaching plot for apprentices, students and the public. During the last year of the program, farmers are matched with prospective land-owners to continue to expand their farm business.

Dirt Works, a part of Lowcountry Local First, was selected from more than 800 applications for the SBA's Growth Accelerator Fund money. It is the only recipient in South Carolina.

"It's refreshing for people to recognize that farming has an incredible economic potential, especially in South Carolina," said Nikki Seibert, Director of Sustainable Agriculture at Lowcountry Local First.

The money will be used to support program operations, equipment and personnel at the incubator farm.

Unwanted Pesticides to Be Collected in York Co.

The S.C. Department of Agriculture is partnering with York County Solid Waste Collection and Recycling Division to accept unused pesticides from farmers and homeowners at no charge.

York County is holding its bi-annual Household Hazardous Waste Collection event at York County Public Works on Oct. 4. Although most of the recycling event is only open to residents of York County, waste pesticides will be accepted from residents of any South Carolina county.

The event will take place from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. Oct. 4. Quantities will be limited to 2,500 pounds of solid waste and 300 gallons of liquid. No fertilizer will be accepted, unless it is combined with a pesticide. No compressed gas cylinders or empty containers will be accepted.

For more information, contact York County Solid Waste Collection and Recycling Division at 803-628-3181. For more information regarding pesticide collection, contact SCDA's John Stokes at 803-737-9696.

Other collection events later this year will be open to commercial applicators.

'Between Farm & Fork' Topic of Conference

The South Carolina Food Policy Council hosts state-wide conferences each year on current farm and food topics. Past topics included sustainable agriculture, farm-to-school, and food deserts.

The 2014 conference, "Between Farm & Fork," takes a look at local foods infrastructure. Food hubs, food nodes, and incubator farms engaged in processing, warehousing, distribution, or training all serve local markets and provide opportunities to thousands of small farms. They help put local food on plates that may not have access through traditional sources.

The conference will be held from 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. on Oct. 22 at the S. C. State Farmers Market.

To register go to www.scfoodpolicy.com/workshops. It is open to food project developers, buyers, farmers, community and economic developers, and local food advocates.
